Born in Bauan, Batangas, October 19, 1890; took his first school years in Jesuits College, San Francisco Javier in Ermita, Manila; graduated as Bachelor of Arts in San Juan de Letran in 1912. Had studied Law and graduated as Bachelor of Laws in Escuela de Derecho de Manila, and in 1916 passed the Bar. Since then he had been practicing law mostly in his own province in Batangas. In 1917 he was elected as Member of the Provincial Board of Batangas. In 1936 was appointed as Justice of the Peace of the Capital Batangas. He did not serve during the Japanese occupation and after the american liberation he was reinstated in the same position. In 1946 he was elected as Congressman in the 2nd district of Batangas. One of his most eloquent speech delivered in the House was his patriotic defense of the three prominent sons of Batangas: Laurel, Recto and Alas against the accusation hurled against them in the House, branding them as "Traitors" during the debate of the Amnesty Proclamation of His Excellency Manuel A. Roxas, President of the Philippine Republic. He is author of important Bills as the Rural Police Bill; Bill nationalizing the practice of certain professions, and Bill of retirement of the service employees and officials, with gratuity.

He has the distinction of being able thru his ability as servant of his constituents to having brought to his district for its rehabilitation in less than three years, the amount of P150,000.00 for public improvements, such as barrio roads, bridges and school buildings.

His motto in his political career is "Service to the People."

BABY INCIONG

Charming, amiable, and soft-spoken Baby Inciong hails from Tuy, Batangas. Beautifully quiet and reserved in her eighteen summers, Baby has endeared herself to a lot of friends and school-mates from the Immaculate Concepcion College.

CARLOS T. TIANGCO
PHARMACIST

Born in Batangas, Batangas province. Studied in Batangas Elementary and Batangas High Schools from 1913 to 1919. Took Pharmacy course in the then "Manila College of Pharmacy" graduating from that institution in 1923. Employed immediately in "Farmacia Mallari", Tondo, Manila, staying there for two years.

In 1925, he was taken in Tuguegarao by his brother, Dr. Alfredo T. Tiangco, then provincial dentist of Cagayan where they opened a drug-store known as "Farmacia Tiangco." After staying two years with his brother, he opened a chain of drug stores.

Before the war, he owned four drug stores, "Farmacia Tiangco" in Aparri, "Farmacia Carsal" in Tuguegarao, "Farmacia Redina" in Tuao, all in Cagayan province and "Farmacia Clorin" in Manila.

Today, he is managing his drug store "Farmacia Carsal" in Tuguegarao, the first drug store opened in Cagayan province during the liberation, and may put again branches in the future.

His hobbies are collecting stamps and books on the Philippines, especially rare ones. He wrote already few books, among them are "Brief History of Batanes Province," "Selected Filipino Poets in English," "Filipino Poets in English and their Works," "Mga Dakilang Pilipino" with the preface of Don Teodoro M. Kalaw, "Kasaysayan ng Tulang Tagalog buhat kay Bagongbanta hanggang sa Ngayon," and others.

He was married to former Miss Salud N. Pagalilauan of Tuguegarao and had four children, namely Redempta, Clorinda, Nelson and Myrna.

DR. ALFREDO TIANGCO

DENTIST

He is an artist by birth and studied in the School of Fine Arts, University of the Philippines while very young and won competitive prizes in painting. He stayed with Fernando Amorsolo and Fabian de la Rosa in 1911 observing their arts. He would have gone to Europe afterward for the perfection of his art, but his parents did not permit him. So he changed his course and matriculated in the Philippine Dental College and became a successful doctor of dental surgery specializing himself in extraction and prosthetic.

Dr. Alfredo Tiangco, was born in Batangas and Batangas High School is his alma mater. In 1920, just after finishing his course he was sent to Cagayan of Luzon by the government as its first provincial dentist and afterward as red cross dentist but he soon resigned to attend to his numerous patients, he being the only dentist of that province for several years. He afterward directed his interest in business and established the "FarmaciaTiangco" the biggest and most popular drugstore in Cagayan, located in Tuguegarao. So successful was he in his business that he also built a theatre, he named "Ideal Theatre" in 1938, but like most every one else, his belongings were burned during the war.

Dr. Tiangco is rehabilitating himself again slowly but surely and he is actively in the practice of his profession as usual.

He is married in Tuguegarao and has four children.

BATANGAS

GEOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

BATANGAS, situated on the southwestern coast of Luzon, borders on the China Sea, with Cavite and Laguna on the north and Laguna and Tayabas on the east. The coast is very irregular, Balayan and Batangas Bays being the largest indentations, while Nasugbu, Talin, Santiago, Janao and Colocante Bays also offer good anchorage. Off the western coast of the province there are several reefs, but these present no difficulty to the navigator entering the harbors. The most important ports are Nasugbu, Calatagan, Balayan, Calaca, Lemery, Taal, San Luis, Bauan, Batangas, Lobo and San Juan. Maricaban and Verde are islands on the southwest coast. The former is mountainous and forested. At Laiya off the coast between San Juan and Lobo are the famous Lobo submarine gardens. During fair weather the water is as clear as crystal and the submarine growth may be seen in all its varied colors and interesting splendor.

The province is considered the most picturesque in the Archipelago, particularly on account of its wide perspectives and of Lake Bombon, in the center of which is an island formed by the crater of Taal Volcano. Inside this crater there is also a lake where formerly there were three. Taal Volcano has experienced several destructive eruptions during historic times, the last one being in January, 1911. Lake Taal (Bombon) is about 10 meters deep and 2.5 meters above sea level. It is said that formerly sea water from Balayan Bay flowed through the Pansipit River into Lake Taal, and boats could therefore pass into the interior of the province. Other mountains are the Batulao range to the west of Lake Taal, Malocot, and Malarayat on the east, and Lobo, Bartolino, and Banoy on the south. The mountains on the west are covered with vegetation in contrast with those of the east which are almost bare.

The climate is warm and humid though it varies locally according to topography. It may be divided into three seasons: first, between the end of October and the beginning of March when the north winds bring very little rain; second, between March and the beginning of July when the dry and warm south and east winds blow; third, between July and October when the winds of the second quadrant bring hurricanes and typhoons.

The valleys and slopes of this rugged country are extremely fertile because of the disintegrated volcanic rock that is carried down from the mountains by the rivers. Rice, sugar, hemp, citrus fruits, coconuts, corn, mangoes, and other fruits and vegetables are grown in abundance for local use and (rice excepted) for export use. Formerly, coffee was one of the principal sources of wealth, but the blight has ruined the industry. Efforts are now being made to reestablish it.

The forests cover an area of about 97,965 hectares. They are thickest in the regions of Santo Tomas, San Juan, and Rosario. Lumbang seed for oil, paints varnishes, and illumination purposes and lumber are exported. Great herds of horses, famous throughout the Archipelago, carabao and cattle are raised on the mountain slopes.

The shores and lakes abound in fish. Lake Bombon furnishes a great supply although it is said that much of the fish caught therein has to be well seasoned to rid it of its disagreeable sulphur taste.

The land is well drained by rivers and streams, the most important being Calumpag, Pansipit, Palico, Obispo, Malaquing Ilog, and Bancoro. Outside of its mineral springs and sulphur, Batangas has no mineral wealth except some copper ore. The San Juan sulphur springs, the Bauan hot springs, and the Rosario fresh water spring are the most famous. Aside from the above, Batangas may well be proud of her caves and grottos. The two largest are found in the slopes of the Mount Pulan Suya and Camantigue of San Juan, one of which has an opening 40 meters in circumference. Issuing therefrom is an underground river which connects with Lake Taal and flows through the Batulao range. Along its course are extensive galleries and chambers lined with fantastically shaped stalactites and stalagmites; and at the approach of an eruption of Taal Volcano, it emits a weird sound, audible at great distances.

The inhabitants of the province are Tagalog. Bauan and Lipa are famous for the fine jusi and piña cloths manufactured there and for the knotted abaca that is sent to Japan for the manufacture of Tagal hats. Embroidery is a growing industry. Trading is extensively carried on and in each of the towns is a market for the sale of its particular products.

This province has 25 municipalities and 552 barrios. Its capital is Batangas with a population of 41,182. It is located in the south central part of the province. Lipa, was declared Chartered City by the Congress and was inaugurated on Aug. 31st, 1947.

HISTORICAL ACCOUNT

At the time of the arrival of the Spaniards there were already, in what is now Batangas Province, large centers of population like Nasugbu, Balayan, and Batangas. Native settlements also existed along the Pansipit River. These settlements are believed to have been in existence long before the Spaniards discovered the Philippines. In fact, according to tradition, the region now known as Batangas was settled by Dato Balensusa and Dato Dumangsil, two of the ten datos who purchased Panay Island from the Negritos. It is believed that these two datos founded the first Malay villages at the mouth of Taal River.

Batangas was explored by Martin de Goiti and Juan de Salcedo on their way to Manila in 1570. From Mindoro, these two brave explorers crossed over to the coast of Batangas. Goiti went directly to and explored the neighborhood of Balayan, while Salcedo sailed up the Pansipit River into the interior. Rejoining each other at Balayan, Goiti and Salcedo then proceeded to Manila, sailing along the western coast of Batangas, then known as the region of Tuley.

The Province of Batangas was created in 1581, its jurisdiction extending over a vast territory including what is now Batangas, Mindoro, Marinduque, and all the land southeast of Laguna as far as Camarines. The name of the province was then Bombon, or Balayan, with the capital at the town of Balayan. At a later date, the outlying regions were separated and Batangas proper became the only constituent part of the province.

The name of the province was changed twice during the 18th century. In 1732, the capital, was moved from Balayan to Taal and the whole province was called, from that time on, after its new capital. But in 1754, when Batangas became the provincial capital, the present name was adopted.

Throughout the seventeenth century the coast towns of Batangas suffered greatly from Moro attacks. During Acuña's rule, for example, the Moro pirates committed depredations on the coast villages. Stone forts were erected at various points along the coast—in Lemery, Taal, Bauan, and Batangas—but still the Moros came. In 1675, they captured the town of Balayan, and in 1754 thirty-eight of their vessels appeared off the coast of Batangas.

Another periodical source of danger to the people of Batangas was the Taal Volcano. This volcano, which from time immemorial the natives had looked upon with superstitious interest, erupted several times during the eighteenth century. As a result of its eruption in 1716 and 1754, several towns in the neighborhood were ruined. Its eruption in the nineteenth century did not result in so much destruction but the most recent one was accompanied by heavy loss in human lives and property.

In 1763, the northern part of Batangas was visited by the British. It will be remembered that an expedition under the command of Backhouse was sent by the British authorities then occupying Manila in search of the treasure of the galleon "Philippine." The expedition which failed to find the coveted treasure went as far as Lipa and plundered the town.

The history of Batangas during the nineteenth century was that of a period of economic growth. Coffee, which was introduced in 1814, became the most important crop of the province. From the time of its introduction into Lipa, that town became very prosperous. Lipa, alone, in 1887, produced 70,000 piculs of coffee. This crop, however, subsequently began to diminish until it was practically destroyed in 1892.

Batangas was one of the first provinces to start the Revolution. Two of the few great leaders of this period were sons of Batangas, namely, the great lawyer and statesman Apolinario Mabini and Miguel Malvar, the famous general. When the Revolutionary Government was established, Manuel Genato served for sometime as provincial governor of Batangas.

Civil government was established on May 2, 1901.

BATANGAS, AFTER LIBERATION

Batangas, one of the most flourishing provinces in the Philippines before the war, with several imposing towns bristling with commercial and industrial activities, did not escape the destruction wrought by the recent World War II. Its fate during the Occupation was characterized by horrible spectacles of wholesale murder of the populace by the Japanese soldiers; deprivation of homes and commandeering of household belongings and food supplies; destruction of roads and bridges, telephone and telegraph lines, and all other means of transportation and communication; the complete destruction of the towns of Sto. Tomas, Tanauan, Malvar, Lipa, San Jose, Lemery, Rosario, Batangas, Bauan, Cuenca, Alitagtag and San Luis; and the crippling of the major industries as well as home industries of the province.

As a result of the different destructions brought about by the war, commerce and business was temporarily paralyzed. Depletion of manpower occasioned by wholesale massacre of the people during the last days of the Japanese occupation and employment of many men in army jobs which they found much more remunerative than any other jobs during the early part of the liberation, were among the major causes which put Batangas into a state of unproductivity.

The Government, aware of the widespread devastations in Batangas, made all efforts towards its rehabilitation. With the help of the U. S. Army Forces, bridges and roads were reconstructed, public buildings were gradually erected, and financial aids were extended to both commercial and industrial firms in order to help them reestablish their prewar business. Likewise, barong-barongs were gradually replaced by semi-permanent residential houses. Little by little, the province is regaining its prewar tempo of business. It is feared, however, that the major export products of the province cannot be rapidly restored to their normal status, on account of the extreme shortage of labor and the timidity of capital. It is believed that capital is reluctant to enter the industrial fields for the reason that the need for foodstuffs, clothing, and other prime commodities is given top priority by many people of the province.

Prices of commodities for a considerable length of time after liberation skyrocketed to a high level. With the advent of 1946, however, the markets were flooded with imported commodities which were denied the people during the war, and these caused the prices of these commodities to decline. Prices, as those in other provinces of the Philippines, could not be kept at a stable level because of frequent strikes in the United States and a number of strikes in the Philippines.

Cost of labor had soared high under those situations. Thus a laborer could make more money than an average chief of an office or bureau. Common laborers earned as much as P5 to P8 a day and peddlers as much as P15 to P30 a day. Comparatively, army laborers were paid less; they got P1.75 to P2.50 a day, but many preferred to work with the Army because of the chances of buying cheap GI goods which they resold to civilians at a good profit.

In the early part of 1947, business activity in the province greatly improved. More participation in retail business was noted and the production of food crops was greatly increased. Public works projects were released and greater financial aids for businessmen and industrialists were secured from government agencies, causing the increase in volume of business of the province. Lumber mills, lime factories, and sugar centrals started operating.

Unfortunately, the closing of the surplus base R in Batangas brought thousands of civilian employees and laborers to unemployment, but this tended to increase the agricultural production of the province as those unemployed had to go back to their farms. Home industries were then reactivated and gradually reached their prewar status. Embroidery, sinamay weaving, livestock raising, interisland shipping, and fishing are considered at present the most active home industries in the province.

Reconstruction of vacation resorts such as Balite Beach in Lipa, the Pancipit in Taal, and the Tinga Waterfalls in Batangas, have also been begun and new streamlined hotels and restaurants as well as theaters have sprung up to the joy of travelers and traders, especially in Batangas, Batangas. As of the first quarter of 1947, twenty-two showhouses were registered for the entire province with at least one for every town in the province, except Batangas and Lipa, where each registered four theaters.

With the present strides of business in the province and the improvements of transportation and communications in the Philippines as a whole, it is believed that Batangas will soon resume its place as one of the leading and industrial centers in Luzon.

The Philippine Charity Sweepstakes

By PATERNO S. GARCIA

When the Philippine Legislature in 1934 created the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office by Act 4130, little thought was given to the fact that a potential institution was being organized to finance the charitable and health activities being conducted by various institutions for the benefit of the Filipino indigent masses.

At the head of the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes Office now is the Honorable Jose A. Dorado, former representative for many years from Capiz. He assumed management of this Office on January 1, 1947.

The Office has so far held 34 draws since 1935, besides the first two draws sponsored by the Philippine Amateur Athletic Federation and the third and fourth by the National Charity Sweepstakes. Since liberation there have been held eight draws which have grossed a total of P16,521,750.00 of which P4,130,437.50 is earmarked for the Charity Fund.

At this writing a total of P53,603,520.88 has been derived from all draws before and after the war. Of this amount, P32,317,867.45 comprises the prize fund; P13,352,096.32, the charity fund; P2,444,406.61 the provincial and city fund, and P5,489,150.50, the operating fund. According to Act No. 4130, as amended by Commonwealth Acts Nos. 301 and 546 and Republic Act No. 72, the proceeds of sales of sweepstakes tickets should be apportioned as follows:

58.5%	Prizes to subscribers
25 %	Charity fund
10 %	Operating expenses
6.5%	As aid to provinces and cities, excepting the City of Manila

100 % Total

Whereas before the outbreak of the war, sweepstakes winners were always given the widest possible publicity, now for reasons of security this Office has deemed it prudent to hide from public knowledge major prize winners. Our records, however, are open to persons of good faith and can show that they have perfect business to examine them. The drawing of winning numbers is held in the presence of a Board of Judges made up of prominent persons whose integrity are above board, and of radio and press representatives, and the general public without distinction.

Out of the proceeds of the Sweepstakes hundreds of welfare and charitable organizations have received material aid for their rehabilitation, purchase of equipment and food and medicines for their respective wards. Thus, out of the 26 draws held since September, 1935 to December, 1941, P9,221,658.82 and P3,630,437.50 out of the 7 post-liberation draws from June 30, 1946 to August 24, 1947, or a total of P12,852,096.32, have been distributed as aid to so many charitable and welfare institutions. The Philippine Tuberculosis Society alone received P1,300,000.00 out of the proceeds from post-liberation draws; the North General Hospital, P50,000.00; the Maternity and Children's Hospital, Manila, P10,000, with other beneficiary institutions like the Mandaluyong Emergency Hospital, Health centers of Quezon City, Asociacion de Damas Filipinas, the Nursing and Traveling Free Clinics, Central Luzon Leprosarium and Western Visayas Treatment Station and Puericulture Centers included. Other entities that have received allotments are Welfareville Institution, Baguio General Hospital, White Cross, Trinidad Maternity and Children's Hospital, National Federation of Women's Club, Boys Scouts of the Philippines, Girls Scouts of the Philippines, National Psychopathic Hospital, Baler Maternity Hospital, Asilo de la Milagrosa in Cebu, etc.

The Sweepstakes has become a popular industry in the country. Its profits, if profits they are, for want of a better term, in the form of services rendered to the people, are incalculable. As it is tickets are being sold like hot cakes. The P1,500,000 quota for April 27, 1947 draw was filled up in record time. After filling the original quota for August 24, 1947 draw in 30 days, additional tickets in the amount of P312,500 had to be issued, thereby making a total of P1,812,500. In the October 26, 1947 draw the quota of P1,500,000 plus P500,000 additional, or a total of P2,000,000, was filled up five weeks before the deadline. Consequently, for this draw alone 17,970 additional prizes in the amount of P258,067.14 were given out.

This rapid sale of tickets, and, over areas more extensive, is due to the reorganization effected by General Manager Dorado from the time he assumed office last January 1. He increased the members of the field force appointed 112 new officials and employees of whom 48 are field men, and with the approval of the Board of Directors, increased the sellers prize 5% of the ticket prize, with bonus of one per cent in case the quota is subscribed or exceeded.

There is perhaps now no event as popular and so widespread in the country as the Philippine Charity Sweepstakes. People from the northernmost Batanes to the distant Sulu are eager to hear news about winning numbers and winners either from the radio, the press or through any other medium. The Philippine Charity Sweepstakes now has some 20,000 authorized sellers who, in turn employ as nearly as 100,000 sub-agents. This situation relieves to a very great extent the unemployment problems which have been aggravated by the closing of army depots and compounds and the influx of population into cities, Manila for instance.

The Philippine Charity Sweepstakes is here to stay. Through the money it has raised, it has ameliorated the conditions of the destitute and the unfortunate, of the sick and the infirm, and the disabled and the invalid. Orphans and war widows look up to the sweepstakes for financial aid and material rehabilitation. Welfare and charitable institutions can only hope to rehabilitate themselves rapidly because of material assistance from this source. Sweepstakes money helps also in bringing up a virile and strong Filipino manhood and womanhood.

Batangas Forest Resources

Batangas, like Cebu, is one of the most deforested province of the country. Close to one half or 151,860 hectares are in actual cultivation. Over 41% or 126,790 hectares are open grass lands. The rest, or less than 10% consists of 28,262 hectares of upland forest, of which over 6% or 19,241 hectares are non-commercial forest; and 1,670 hectares are swamps.

It is generally believed that Batangas was in some remote past covered with unbroken forest growth of some kind. As early as 1936, the total standing commercial timber amounted to 1,271,393 cubic meters or 539 million board feet. Latest records of the Bureau of Forestry, however, show: that the commercial forests cover 9,021 hectares with a total stand of 451,050 cubic meters or 191,235,200 board feet (gross volume).

There were in force during the fiscal year 1946-47, one ordinary timber license with an allowable cut of 15 cubic meters, capitalized at P300.00 in an area of 80 hectares; one private gratuitous license covering 20 cubic meters, for personal use outside communal forests, and one public gratuitous license for 1,000 cubic meters for public works. A total of 192.90 cubic meters with forest charges and recharges of P1,081.40 were produced during the fiscal year. These, however, were cut without license.

The Bureau of Forestry has classified as timberland 13,188 hectares or 4.2% and has released as alienable and disposable 308,582 hectares or 64% of the province. There remain to be classified 97,883 hectares or 31.8% of the entire area of Batangas. In principle, this territory, because of its geographical location and need for balanced economy, be retained and added to the classified timberland of 13,188 hectares, the goal being 111,071 hectares or 36%. Progressive countries, as a rule, devote at least one third of their land area to forests.

To restore the productive condition of actual and potential timberland as well as private forest land through reforestation and to assist nature in the speedy restocking of blank and culled non-commercial forests in order that maximum production in timber and other uses be attained at all times are the ultimate goal for which forestry practice attempts to achieve. This could only be accomplished with the joint cooperation of the various agencies of the government and the people of Batangas themselves.

AGRICULTURAL ACTIVITIES

Act 85 provides the means to promote, develop and rehabilitate the agricultural conditions of the province into a state of progressiveness as it can be possibly done. The technical personnel rendered technical assistance to group as well as individual farmer in making every farm produced the most income. The use of improved varieties of crops, use of selected seeds and plants, adoption of proper cultural scientific procedures, use of proper fertilizer for the crop or crops grown, employment of proper irrigation and drainage, conservation of soil through contour farming and crop rotation to maintain soil fertility, control of plant pests and diseases which are limiting factors in crop production, etc., are among the approved methods taught to farmers.

Batangas in accordance with its geographical and topographical conditions is better suited to the growing of fruit trees than to any other farm crops, such as rice, corn, sugarcane, vegetables, etc., although the latter crops may be grown to a certain extent in certain sections of the province.

In fruit trees alone, particularly citrus of the varieties of mandarin, such as szinkom, ladu, Batangas, king, etc., pummelo, oranges, others, the province is receiving no less an income of P1,000,000.00 annually, from the already established commercial orchards according to science including all others. Batangas may become the California of the Philippines in the future. For the development of the fruit industry, the following stations and nurseries are in operation in the province, as sources of the best plant materials.

Name	Area (Ha.)	Location	Remark
Batangas Central Plant
Propagation and Demonstration Station
	10	Bolbok, Batangas	Act 85
Rosario Municipal Nursery	2	Rosario, Batangas	Act 85
Lobo Municipal Nursery ..	1	Lobo, Batangas	Act 85
Lipa Citrus Station	18	Marawoy, Lipa, Bat.	National

Among the principal farm crops that are grown in the province are rice, corn, sugarcane, etc. The areas planted to rice and corn for 1947—1948 crop season follow:

Kind	Area Planted (Ha.)	Production (Cavan)
RICE:
Upland	61,954	861,265
Lowland	5,230	115,964
Palagad	1,225	(Unharvested)
CORN:
Wet season	18,135	184,926
Dry season	11,323	(Harvesting just started)

Of notable aspect in our agricultural development is the cultivation of deversified crops. Batangas is one if not the sole province that practices crop diversification extensively and intensively. Besides its lands are practically distributed in equal proportion with slight exception among its inhabitants. There is hardly to be found an individual farmer that does not own a farm. Every farm family has sufficient income to live even not decently but peacefully. Herein lies our economic stability.

MAYOR ESTEBAN MAYO
CITY OF LIPA

Important events that occurred in Lipa during the Spanish regime

By BALDOMERO B. REYES

The oldest settlement of Lipeños was in a place called Tagbakin somewhere in the southeastern regions of Lake Bombon. This settlement was teeming with thousands of people with well built houses, permanently settled, agricultural life and flourishing commerce when, three hundred and fifty years ago, it was first reached by the Agustinian Missionaries led by Hernando de Cabrera in 1605.

In 1574, the brave grandson of Legaspi, Salcedo, who was never beaten in his speedy exploits in Pampanga, Pangasinan, Cagayan and the Ilocos and whom Rizal called the Spanish Cavendish in the Philippines, was not able to subdue the Lake Bombon regions because he was repulsed by 16,000 strong natives.

The Oriental Historian H. Otley Beyer makes us believe that the old settlement at Tagbakin might have been one of those founded by the descendants of the companions of the Bornean Chief Datu Puti who in the beginning of the tenth century A. D. came to Lake Bombon after having bought the island of Panay from the natives there called Atis under the chief Maribodong, with a gold salocot called sadok and a gold chain so long that it touched the ground when worn: because this historian tells us that those Bornean chiefs and their tribe mixed with the natives and their descendants established settlements in all directions in southern Luzon as far as Laguna de Bay and the present Bicol regions.

From 1605 to 1702 the old Lipa settlement was not yet a municipality. It was merely a missionary site for the propagation of Catholicism by the Agustinians under the Alcaldia of Calilaya.

The rise of the level of the sea due to the eruptions of Taal volcano caused the people to move the settlement eastward until the site of Lumang Lipa became the center. Another eruption of the same volcano sank again the settlement there and the people moved to the present site of Balete where Lipa was first organized into a municipality in 1702 with Geronimo de los Santos as the first gobernadorcillo.

In 1754 Taal Volcano erupted again and covered the town at Balete with lava and ashes. The people travelled far to the highlands and located the town on the present place. The gobernadorcillo was Tomas Hernandez. This was in 1756.

In 1757 the gobernadorcillo Nicolas Bravo ordered the people to gather stones and bricks from the seashore and bring them to the land for the building of the first church and tower.

In 1763 when the head of the town was Francisco Antonio the British troops came here to Lipa in pursuit of the Spanish treasure which came from the Galleon Filipino and which the Spaniards under Simon de Anda were hiding and of the wealth of the Spanish treasury amounting to 222,0000 escudos under the custody of Nicolas Echaus, the treasurer of the Spanish government then. The British succeeded in getting here ₱3,000.00 of the said treasure. They burned the church and destroyed the idols, images of the saints.

In 1782 the tobacco monopoly was first introduced in Lipa under the headship of Pascual Gutierrez and the people began to feel the hardship of restricting their right to plant, to sell or to smoke the tobacco they themselves produced.

In 1787, the first scaffold for the execution of the outlaws was erected in front of the Escuela Pia under the gobernadorcillo Bernabe Laguerta.

In 1796, when Baltazar de Africa was mayor all the young men in the villages were caught and conscripted into the Spanish army.

During the first century of its existence as a municipality, the most colorful figure that became gobernadorcillo was one by the name of Pablo Maralit. Until now there is a book of legends entitled "Don Pablo Maralit" which recounts the adventures and miraculous deeds of that man for he was well reputed as possessor of amulets called anting anting and aguimats that enabled him to walk on the surface of the water and do other wonders.

During the last century of the Spanish rule over Lipa, from 1800 to the revolution of 1896, some important events took place in this town.

In 1805, under the mayorship of Leon de Africa famine overtook Lipa so much that the price of rice rose to one manicolo (ten centavos) a chupa. The poor who could not afford it used to unfold cloths on the amorcico grass that grew by the waysides, idleyards and fields so the tiny seeds would stick, be gathered, pounded and the small grains boiled soft in plenty of water and swallowed by the people to escape from death by hunger.

In 1808, Galo de los Reyes began the widespread cultivation of the coffee trees by compelling the people to plant the same and thus brought about the wealth, splendor and fame that Lipa had after his time.

In 1820, the tronko system of fixing the boundaries of the land under Felipe Teodoro as mayor was introduced. Previous to that time, anyone who could clear the forest was considered owner of his clearings.

In 1829, an adventurer from Bauan became gobernadorcillo of Lipa. He was Pablo Macarandang who became famous as a poet, prophet and medicine man. He could cure various diseases and tell the exact moment of the death of anyone he examined though appearing well and strong.

In 1841 when Galo de Africa was mayor, a comet with long tail which the people called sombol appeared and foretold of bad omen. This was followed by a revolt in Tayabas which caused death to many including women, children and the aged.

In 1852 when the gobernadorcillo was Pedro Bautista there were successive earthquakes so strong that the midnight mass for Christmas that year was not held.

In 1858, when the gobernadorcillo was Mateo Katigbac, there arrived in Lipa a Spaniard by the name of Gregorio Aguilera who collected for the first time the fallas or extra tribute from those people who did not like to work in the public works. Because of his work he was called Fallas.

In 1868 fire burned the southeastern portion of Lipa and in 1869 another fire burned the entire town together with all the belongings and coffee plants of the people in the suburbs. But the people did not mind the destruction, because they were wealthy as a consequence of the coffee industry. On the ashes they built new houses, bigger and more massive, of thicker bricks and stones, galvanized iron imported from Europe and the best of timber hewn from the mountains. The planning, premises, court yards, art, architecture, carvings, statutes and decorations were patterned after the mansions and castles of the barons and rich people of Europe during the days of the manorial lords.

Those were indeed golden days in the glorious history of Lipa. During those days of about half a century from the time of Celestino Solis in 1843 to the time of Eduardo Mayo in 1890, the gold of Europe through Spain and of America through Nueva España flowed to Lipa. It was at that time in 1887 that Lipa was given the title Villa de Lipa by Queen Cristina II of Spain because of the fame of Lipa as one of the coffee producing centers of the world.

Lipa at that time, together with all of its barrios and mountains, was filled with coffee plants. During harvest season the main streets were filled with hundreds of carts loaded with coffee, being pulled by cows and carabaos to the warehouses of the rich where the seeds were to be dried on pavements hectares in extensions.

The Real street of Lipa was like the Escolta of Manila. It was lined on both sides by stores, bazaars, and tiendas owned largely by Chinese, Hindus and Jews. They sold all things, goods and commodities imported from Europe, America and Asia. People from the neighboring regions came here to make their purchases for then it was seldom that they could not buy here anything that they desired to have. The seaports of Lipa then were Calamba, Batangas and Manila for it was in these places where she brought her coffee to be exported to Europe and to Mexico and in the return trip, the hundreds of carts and horses that brought the coffee grains, brought the gold coins and the goods and commodities from these seaports. During those days many of those that engaged in the planting and trade of coffee became fabulously rich and most of the rich families had a hundred or more servants each. They took away the molds from their gold coins by drying the coins on wide mats in the sunshine on the azoteas, yards or roofs of their big houses. During those days paper money was not common and the custom among the people was to bring their heavy gold coins in bags loaded on horse backs or in carts.

But the coffee industry which brought paradise to many did not last long. A certain kind of fungus known as smuts began to appear, sapped the juice of the plant and killed it. In 1888 during the mayorship of Martin Kison, the colorful procession held to celebrate its prosperity proved to be the industry's funeral; for in the year that followed in 1889 during the mayorship of Eduardo Mayo, our coffee trees began to die, and the industry that had brought wealth, splendor and fame to the community was no more. The superstitious, not knowing the origin of the death of the plants, assigned the cause to the coincidence that beautiful ladies and not the images of saints were placed on the beautiful floats that paraded during the celebration.

In 1882 when Bernardo Solis was the gobernadorcillo, an epidemic known as Asiatic Cholera swept the entire southern Luzon regions and Lipa became a victim. So mortal was the attack that whole households were wiped out in many places and most of the cemeteries in the provinces were so filled with dead bodies that the people did not have the time to bury them so corpses were filed like sacks of coffee one above the other in heaps on the cemeterial grounds. Later this was followed by another kind of epidemic called Beriberi and in 1889 by smallpox when vacuna or vaccination was first introduced here in Lipa to prevent the spread of that dreaded disease.

From 1886 to 1887, there came and stayed in Lipa as a student and teacher of Don Sebastian Virrey in his college a man who later became the soul of the Philippine Revolution. He was Apolinario Mabini, the irreconcilable, the sublime and the brains behind Aguinaldo. He finished here his Bachelor of Arts degree and the degree of Professor of Higher Instructions having finished his secondary course in his home town, Tanauan, under another Lipa tutor named Valerio Malabanan, a priest.

In 1889, the reputation of Rizal as a great patriot was already well known in Lipa and in 1896 the people revolted and Rodrigo Navas the commander of the Spanish garison of 500 Spaniards surrendered to the Filipino insurgents under the command of General Eleuterio Marasigan on July 10, 1896.

Of the around two hundred gobernadorcillos that Lipa had during the Spanish times, the most important in so far as laying the foundations of Lipa's prosperity and greatness was concerned, was Galo de los Reyes who became gobernadorcillo four times in 1808, 1812, 1822 and 1825; because if he did not have the foresight, the industry, the pioneering spirit and the strictness for the planting of the coffee plants, Lipa would have been just a mere town like many others without any name, glamour and golden pages in its past.

The people that recieved the blessings of his foresight did not fail to recognize his importance to the town when for the celebration of the industry in 1888 his picture was the only display on the first float of the parade. In fact the Lipa people then planned a monument for him, the site and corner stones of which were already begun but the death of the coffee trees caused the abandonment of the idea.

Many of the gobernadorcillos or capitanes became famous for their good movement, kindness to the poor, justness in their dealings and courage and tact in the catching of the outlaws. Such were Celestino Solis in 1843, 1848, 1860 and 1861; Juan Malabanan in 1853, Sebastian Malabanan in 1864, Doroteo de los Reyes in 1871, Simeon Luz in 1879 and in 1880 and Martin Quizon in 1887 and 1888.

Many of the gobernadorcillos were great grandfathers of most of the prominent families in Lipa today. Don Luis Kalaw of 1821 was the grandfather of Valerio Kalaw, first mayor during American times and the great grandfather of Teodoro Kalaw famous journalist, parliamentarian, statesman and historian and the political scientist Maximo M. Kalaw. Don Sebastian de la Cruz Mayo of 1804 was the son of the Irish Captain Ferdinand Mayo who came here with the British and from whom Claro Mayo Recto the poet, satirical writer and parliamentarian and the Mayos of today have descended. Don Jose Katigbak of 1827 was the great grandfather of the Katigbaks of today. Don Celestino Solis of 1843 came here from a Barrio of Sto. Tomas as a mere clerk in the municipio whose ascendants were Indios from Malabar who were shipwrecked in Luzon with the ascendants of General Malvar and who by industry, thrift and good luck saved great fortunes and became the owner of the vast landed estates in Lipa, Rosario, San Pablo and Dolores that most of the present day wealthy families of Solises, Aguileras, Katigbacs and Salases now own. He was the father of Capitang Andong a most glamorous and colorful figure of his days. Manuel Rojas of 1857 might have been the father of Don Sixto Roxas of 1867 who in turn was the father of the now famous physicians Baldomero and Sixto Roxas and the famous chemist Dr. Maning Roxas of today. Don Juan de Silva of 1710 might have been the father of Don Patricio de Silva of 1749, of Jose de Silva of 1767, of the famous Don Pedro Silva of 1893 who in turn is the father and uncle of the now prominent Silva families in Lipa today. The Africas that assumed the mayorship several times in 1777 of Juan de Africa, in 1796 of Juan S. Africa, in 1805 of Leon de Africa, and in 1841 of Galo de Africa were surely the great grandparents of the numerous Africas. The prominent Luz family that has produced a well known writer and businessman Arsenio Luz who is a world figure surely came from Jose Luz of 1854 and 1866. The Katigbaks that gave to the country the engineer and planner of the Puente de España Petronio Katigbac of 1858, Norberto Katigbac of 1862, Cayetano Katigbac of 1865, Lino Katigbac of 1870, and Mariano Katigbac of 1896. The Dimayuga family that produced some poets and dramatologist in the dialect must have come from Nicolas Dimayuga of 1774, Francisco Dimayuga in 1803, Evaristo Dimayuga of 1809, Nicolas Dimayuga of 1813, and Celestino Dimayuga of 1840. The Malabanans that gave such famous tutors like Padre Valeriano Malabanán, teacher of many famous Batangueños like Mabini, Sotero Laurel, Diego Gloria and others at about the last century of Spanish rule are relatives of Sebastian Malabanán of 1863 and 1864. The Manguiat had their great great grandparents Ventura Manguiat of 1711 and 1712; the Masons, Francisco Masonsong in 1855; the Bautistas, Pedro Bautista in 1852; the Altamiranos, Alejandro Altamirano in 1859; and the Reyeses represent the most numerous of all in the list of gobernadorcillos as of the around two hundred terms of that office during the Spanish times, that family name assumed the post for nineteen times; a number the corresponding names for which are too many to be enumerated here.

But most of the family names of the early town leaders have completely become extinct in the Lipa people of today. Such gobernadorcillos like Matias Arenas in 1703, Juan Mulingtapang in 1704, Juan Gemarra in 1708, Luis Matienzo in 1713, Juan Santonino in 1718, Tomas Matira in 1721, Martin Salinas in 1722, Fausto Cruzar in 1726, Agustin Quiachon in 1731, Pedro Banaag in 1736, Baltazar Pasig in 1737, Nicolas Carlos in 1781, Bernabe Laguerta in 1787, Juan San Miguel in 1795, Pedro Bernardo in 1817, Felipe Teodoro in 1820, Mateo Mano in 1849, and Manuel Mando in 1856 do not now have offsprings in Lipa bearing their surnames.
